NEW BUSINESS

- Aufuldish announced Lake Erie Energy Development Corporation (LEEDCo) had been awarded from the Department of Energy a $5 million grant, with a $1 million match required (which is already available without any public funds).

(LEEDCo is a private, nonprofit corporation whose primary goal is to build wind turbines in Lake Erie and to help promote industries related to wind turbines. It's main efforts are in Ashtabula, Cuyahoga, Lake and Lorain counties, which all border Lake Erie.)

"This next year, 2013, will be a very pivotal year for the LEEDCo Board," Aufuldish said. "There's various guidelines that came with this grant, and if all those guidelines are met, we can apply again for $10 million a year, each year, for the next four years."

He said the estimated cost for the nine planned wind turbines is about $40 million and could generate many jobs in Northeast Ohio.

- Troy said he attended two conferences with the National Association of Counties and the main concern were the "fiscal cliff" negotiations Congress was holding in Washington, D.C. Everyone is concerned about how they will be affected by the results of the discussions on taxes.

So far, it appears municipal bonds will retain their tax-exempt status.

It is believed Congress and the President will reach some agreements, but probably not until the last minute.

Another major topic coming up will be immigration reform.

In the state legislature, the 911 monthly fee has been retained permanently, although it was reduced from 28 cents to 25 cents per month.

Another change, Troy said, was that the Ohio Supreme Court ruled engineer departments should pay for their own insurance from the income they derive from license plate fees and gas taxes, rather than payment coming from county general funds.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The commissioners adjourned to executive session to discuss pending litigation, real estate and personnel compensation.
