DEPARTMENTAL RE-

PORTS

UTILITIES

Commissioner Dan Troy asked LCDU Director Rick Martin to explain why the county charges a flat rate for sewer charges whether it is a single-person household or a family of five, rather than tying it in with water consumption.

"Our outcome, either way, is we maintain one of the lower rates, and that's the message across the board to everybody," Martin said.

STORMWATER

The Lake County Stormwater Management Department co-hosted a special training session for about 60 road department personnel from Lake and Geauga counties. The session was funded by the Lake Erie Protection Fund.

NEW BUSINESS

The GOP has, so far, been able to agree on new congressional districts, so currently there are to be two primaries in 2012, one in March and one in June, plus the general election in November.

Troy said "The state has indicated it would set aside $15 million to pay for the June primary, but he questioned whether those funds would be disbursed before the elections or held for reimbursement.

"We'd be hard-pressed, as would all counties, to advance the cost of three full elections next year, and then wait for reimbursement," Troy said.

He suggested the election officials be called before the commissioners to discuss the matter.

However, Commissioner Ray Sines expressed the opinion that the Ohio Legislature would work it out and have just one primary.

PUBLIC COMMENT

John Muzic of Painesville Township mentioned a news article from a daily paper which covered a group of people that was going to different Job and Family Service offices around the state and asking questions about procedures.

The group allegedly found some departments had no intake policies and JFS personnel who would give information to unqualified applicants on how to get around requirements.

Troy said LCJFS followed "strict regulations."

"We don't operate in the same fashion as some of those counties," Douglas said. "When people come in to apply for public assistance, they actually have to submit an application."

Once the application is submitted, LCJFS personnel verify the information to determine if the person is eligible.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The commissioners adjourned to executive session to discuss pending litigation and personnel discipline.
